Chinese culture is rich, abundant and long-lasting. As immigrants living in America, our families continued to educate our children in the Chinese culture. Understanding the importance of our history, we wanted to share that gift, not only with our children, but with our community. With that belief, 20 years ago, Chinese School in Thousand Oaks was founded. Today we are renting facilities and classrooms from the Redwood Middle School. Our student range from 5 year olds to persons who are not too old to embrace new language and culture.

The school administrative team oversees planning and direction of the curriculum and operations. The school has more than 20 teachers who instruct on 10 different levels of Chinese language classes, Chinese history, calligraphy, painting, kung fu, origami, folk dance, chess, and crafts, etc.

Our school education emphasizes appreciation of the Chinese culture and Chinese language. Listening, speaking, reading, writing, and comprehension are basic skills we seek to teach. Chinese public speech contests and poetry recital contests are held every year. We also send students to competitions that are attended by contestants from all Chinese Schools in the Southern California region.

Our Parents and the CVCCA hold special events and parties for the students throughout the year. These events include a year-end picnic, carnival, Halloween costume contest, Christmas party, Chinese New Year Celebration, and more. Chinese scholars and artists are also invited to the school to provide special seminars and demonstrations.

Thanks to everyone who has contributed their time money, and effort to help the school grow. Your gift has made our school a thriving cultural experience that benefits the entire community

My Experience at Chinese School

cliff S. Lim

Since my command of Mandarin is not very good even though I studied 7 years in Chinese school, I decide to write the essay in English.

My experience in Chinese school is very fruitful, for the teachers have taught me to respect the elders, parents and teachers. This is evident from the recommendation letters from my teachers and Ms. Saterbo (Manager of Manna Food Bank).

Initially, when I was in Chinese school, I was NOT happy, for the textbook was too difficult for me and the teacher was assigning too many homeworks. However, with my mother's help. I was able to cope with the assignments. Every Friday night, I had to study until midnight to complete the assignments for the Saturday morning class. I had to memorize the Chinese characters and the pronunciation. I had great difficulty in making the proper pronunciation, because for each tone came different word. I struggled for at least 3 years before I could properly pronounce the word. The teachers in Chinese school were very good, for they had interest in their students. Sometime the teacher called my parents at home and congratulated me to my parents. I felt very proud when my father told me that I had done a great job in studying Chinese.

My last year in Chinese school gave me lots of memory, for I was old enough to appreciate the Chinese culture. 3 years ago, I went back to Malaysia to visit my grandparents and they were very impressed how "Chinese" I was even though I was brought up and educated in the "Western" culture. For instance, when I had dinner with my uncles and aunties, I always let them select the food first before me and also I addressed them properly whenever I saw them. This is contrary to the behavior of my cousin who has never studied in any Chinese school. My grandparents complained that they were very rude.

I am proud to say that the Chinese school has given me the Chinese culture back.

What Chinese School Gave Me

In my English class, we are reading Joy Luck Club by Amy Tan. It is about the story of four Chinese women who immigrated from China to America. They undergo many hardships and changes. As they pass their stories down to their daughters, who are American born Chinese, they are saddened and disappointed by the ignorant and indifferent attitude of their daughters. Some may say it is a generation gap, but I say it is a culture gap. It aggrieves me to think that this story could have been a reflection upon myself and my parents.

Growing up was a rather confusing period for me. I have always lived in a predominantly white community. I was different from the other children at school in looks and names. When my classmates would ask me where I was from, I would shyly answer I was Chinese. I was even more different because I had to go to Chinese School on Saturday mornings. However, funny as it may seem, I never minded. Saturdays was the time I could experience being the same as everyone around me. They could not tease me for they would be teasing themselves. I made friends, friends I will have for life because we share a common bond: our heritage.

Chinese School was and is much more than an opportunity for people to blend and make friends. During my twelve years in Chinese School, I was taught to speak and understand the language fluently. I was given the key to unlock the mystery behind ancient traditions, stories, history, culture, and other treasures that will remain enigmatic for others. What I learned cannot be compared to even the largest diamond or the purest gold on earth. It gave me myself, my legacy and that of my ancestors.

Dwelling upon those memorable years brings a smile upon my face. No words can express the gratitude I have for my parents, for their encouragement pushing me to go every Saturday. I came home each time with a new piece of myself in place. I thank them for not letting me turn into the daughters of the Joy Luck Club. I tell people I am Chinese with my head high and appreciate the fact that I am a descendant of the greatest people. My only regret is to be unable to write this essay in Chinese. However when I enter the University of California, Los Angeles in the fall, I will continue my studies in the Chinese language. Ask me in a couple of years, perhaps I will translate this into Chinese!

CVCCA Scholarship Essay

宋維 Lucy Wei Yu

Throughout the years that I was fortunate enough to attend Chinese School, I learned many things both about myself, and my culture. Instead of struggling with my Asian identity in an American society. I adjusted to the fact that I was and am an Asian American in a diverse society. Seeing the many familiar faces of my people allowed me to feel a part of a community in which I could freely express myself.

Attending the Chinese School at an early age helped me to cope with the differences in culture and language. Speaking Mandarin at home automatically carried over into school. As a result, I was put into various ESL (English as a Second Language) classes which alienated me from the other students and made me question my abilities and intelligence. At the Chinese School however, seeing the familiar makeup of black hair, brown eyes, and yellow skin tone put all the insecurities and discomfiture aside. The interactive activities we engaged ourselves in broadened our perspectives of the Chinese culture, enabling us to form a haven from which we could escape the misconceptions and stereotypes of society.

Annual traditions such as the New Year's celebration encouraged pride in various Chinese customs and acted as a way in which we could reconnect with our Asian roots. The traditional dragon dance, performances by the students, and exchanging of the red envelopes filled with money combined to radiate a sense of comfort and reassurance- especially among members of the earlier generations who feared the lost of such experiences for their children. These activities and many others helped those individuals like myself who were either born here or moved here at an early age to develop a sense of culture, pride, and most importantly, a Chinese identity.

Over the years I spent in attendance at the Chinese School, the knowledge I attained and the experiences I encountered will remain with me throughout the years to come. In developing that sense of belonging, I was able to become a strong, ambitious, and confident individual who was not afraid of identifying with my Chinese culture.

My Chinese School Experience Yi-Ching Lee

When I was younger, Chinese School denied me the rights to watch Saturday ne, missing these cartoons was like a football fan missing the Superbowl. Even though I went to school Monday through Friday, I still had to go Saturday as well. My parents forced me to wake up in the morning and get ready for school when others did not. I did not understand why I had to do this since learning about the Chinese language, how to write it, and how to speak it was not appealing to a young and energetic boy. However to my dismay, Chinese School was fim. I was able to see and work with other Chinese kids. I made many friends whom I still know today. Chinese School served its purpose well as it restored my Chinese. Without a this weekly refreshment, all would have been lost. Chinese was the first language I learned, but now English is my better by far.

I do appreciate all that Chinese School has done for me. I am able to understand most Chinese when it is spoken to me. My parents can talk to me in either Chinese or English which is a great asset. Whenever they cannot express themselves in English, they use Chinese. I also value my Chinese because I can communicate with my grandparents and other relatives. Over the years, I have grown very close to them. Being able to speak and understand Chinese has allowed me to do this which is extremely important to me.

Chinese School has also prepared me for a promising future. I can either work here in the United States or in Asia. Since I am bilingual, I have a rare characteristic which only few can match. After years of Chinese School I have learned to treasure what I have greatly.

Chinese School Essay

Ring, ring, ring, ring. Smack. As I turn off the alarm, I realize that it is Saturday, and this means time to wake up for Chinese School. If it weren't for Chinese School, I'd be sleeping in. That could be a good thing to some people, but to others it isn't. Sleeping in is wonderful, but why sleep when you have the chance of broadening your horizons by learning and feeding you brain new interesting facts and pieces of knowledge.

Ever since I could walk, I have been going to Chinese School. Or at least, that's how long it seems like it has been. Now, don't get me wrong, Chinese School wasn't all bad; we had break time and we had snacks at break time. That was the best part.

Seriously, I would have to look back upon Chinese School with happy memories. My favorite part of each year would be the Chinese New Year's Party, and the end of the year picnic. Those were always really fun. Maybe, I learned the most during those times. The different shows put on by different classes would teach us in a very interesting way. Not to discredit the teachers though; they try very hard to teach us Chinese Americans to speak and write Chinese.

In Chinese School, I have also met some life long Chinese friends.

Although America is a very diverse country, I think people still tend to stick to people of their own race. In fact sometimes I feel more comfortable with Asian people than other people of different races. I believe my Chinese friends are the ones that I will most likely keep in touch with throughout college because we seem to have more in common. We can also talk about other people in Chinese and everyone else won't have a clue what we are talking about.

I do have some recommendations for Chinese School though, well at least for the Chinese New Year's Party. I think that instead of promoting those American gymnasts and things like that we should be promoting Chinese culture. Afterall, this is our New Year's party. I think that having each class put on a little act would contribute a lot. Not only would the parent's enjoy seeing their little babies on stage, but the kids would actually learn from studying the Chinese culture to put on some kind of a show. It would be interesting and beneficial to everyone. This doesn't mean that everything has to be in the Chinese language. We just don't want to forget that the purpose of the program is to promote the Chinese culture people.

I am very glad that my parent's made me go to Chinese School. I think I learned a lot more than I thought I would. I think it was a positive experience, and I also think that it will benefit me a lot considering that I am going to UCLA. There are so many Chinese people and Asians there, that every time I go visit, I hear Chinese (and Taiwanese) people speaking everywhere. To my surprise, I can understand almost everything they say, and I give a lot of credit to the Chinese School. Thank you.

A New Outlook

"NO!! Why do I have to go??" These were the first words out of my mouth when my mother told me that I had to go to Chinese school every Saturday morning. Then I screamed, "It's not going to help me in the future. It's just a waste of tirge." At first, I just did not want to go to Chinese school. I did not believe it was ever going to help me. All I wanted to do with my Saturdays was to sleep in. However. Saturday arrived and my first day of Chinese school was quite unique. It is a Saturday that I will never forget.

Our car had just pulled into Waverly Adult School and my parents were going to sign me up. After about fifteen minutes, I was assigned to the first grade. I thought to myself, how embarrassing, a fourth grader being put in a first grade class. I struggled for a few minutes, but finally strolled into the classroom. As I entered, I did not know anyone, but what was worse was the teacher was speaking only Chinese. I knew it was going to be a long day. However, as the day wore on I began to learn the phonics and it did not seem too hard.

Undoubtedly, the second year of Chinese school was much better. I began to understand Chinese much better as well as being able to read and write a little. In addition, there was an incentive with the addition of extra-curricular activities, in which I took paper folding. Now classes seemed to last forever, but once it was 12 o'clock the fun began. In the paper folding class, we made birds, pagodas, and shirts out of one dollar bills. Furthermore, what would a paper folding class be without folding paper airplanes as well, but these airplanes just did not seem to fly well.

After four and half years of Chinese school, I look back to find many positive things about my experience. First of all, I discovered that by going to Chinese school, I spoke more Chinese at home with my parents. Also, I found that I was going to be able to use my Chinese on our trip to Taiwan the following summer, after my first year. Not only was I able to speak fluently, I also impressed my grandparents. Furthermore, I also found that the Chinese New Year's parties, thrown by the Chinese school, were a great cultural experience. I was able try the foods used to celebrate the holiday as well as learn about the customs during the celebration. Lastly, I found that being able to read and write Chinese will be great help in the future. With a probability in a pursuit of a business degree, understanding another language, especially Chinese, would be a great advantage when doing business in the Far East.

When I was younger, I just did not believe that Chinese school was ever going to help. I just thought that my parents were finding a new way to punish me. However, as I have grown older, I have discovered the advantage of being fluent in Chinese as well as the importance of holding on to my heritage.

My Chinese School Experience

by Helen S. Yeh

I began studying Chinese in 1987, when I knew how to speak Mandarin with only a limited Chinese vocabulary, and could not recognize even my written name. I attended the Thousand Oaks Chinese School reluctantly at first, and learned little, but became more assiduous after a few years. Each Saturday, as I met people who excelled in the language that could potentially broaden my perspectives, I felt encouraged to improve my Chinese. My vocabulary grew as my teacher generously encouraged me to learn more words and idioms, and as I learned to use a Chinese dictionary. With that ability, I will always be able to continue studying Chinese.

Throughout the years I attended Chinese School, I experienced various aspects of the Chinese culture. In class, the teachers often read famous poems, explained the stories and meanings of many idioms, introduced history, and taught how to celebrate holidays to the students. I remember the poetry recital and calligraphy contests as practices in Chinese, apart from the classes. Many of the stories my classes read explained historical figures and four word idiomatic phrases, which deepened my knowledge of Chinese. Perhaps the Chinese New Year parties were the most memorable, where my classes sometimes performed, and where I observed some examples of the celebration of this holiday.

Only after I began studying Chinese did I become aware of the importance of a second language, especially one that many of my relatives spoke. Each time my relatives visited me, or I visited them, I noticed I could understand more of what they spoke. Instead of complaints that I could not understand the language of my heritage, I heard praises that I could learn so much Chinese, despite being in America. The Chinese School has offered me the opportunity to learn much of this valuable asset, both in language, and in culture. Although I should have spent more time on Chinese to learn more, I still feel extremely lucky that I could have attended such a well-planned school, where I learned not only the Chinese language and the ability to further my studies with the aid of a Chinese dictionary, but also a deeper appreciation of the Chinese culture.

My Chinese School experience, beginning in the third grade, was fun and educational. The Waverly Adult School became a very familiar place to me during the several yeas I attended Chinese School; the men and women doing 大 越 became a common sight, the traffic jams of parents taking their children, sometimes small toddlers, sometimes mature teenagers, to class became a given on every Saturday morning, and the whole atmosphere of community bonding made it very memorable.

I remember passing by classrooms and hearing everyone chanting the うタロに alphabet over and over again, or seeing students repeat brushstrokes of complicated characters, with the teacher standing close by. The heart of the Chinese School lies with the teachers, the administration, and the support of the parents. I remember thinking what a great thing it was to have all these people care and volunteer their time and efforts for the organization. As a result, many children who grow up now as Americans are also learning about the importance of their Chinese heritage and culture.

The language, arts, dance, verse and tradition are only parts of the Chinese culture, and they are all taught in this place. After morning classes of academic building of vocabulary and speech, I remember taking an amazingly diverse number of elective courses, ranging from drawing to flower arranging, from ballroom dancing to 📆 🖔 , from arts and crafts to Chinese knot art. In this broad mix of western and eastern hobbies, the best of both worlds are combined.

As I grow older, I realize how special it is to have second language, to have another culture that is so rich, to have had the opportunity to expand upon it. Though I stopped Chinese School for a while, I plan taking more Chinese language classes in college, classes with more intestity, perhaps, but not with more fun and feeling of comraderie.

I started going to Thousand Oaks Chinese School when I was five. Because I had learned to speak Chinese before English, it seemed only natural to my parents for me to progress into reading and writing Chinese as well. Chinese school was also a way for me to preserve the language aspect of my heritage, since my knowledge of English was rapidly outgrowing that of my Chinese with each (English) school day. As I was young, however, I saw Chinese school as only a waste of time and precious Saturday morning cartoons. I remember begging my parents not to make me go. I was annoyed by the repetition needed to learn the correct brush strokes and character recognition, and I resented the homework piled on top of my regular schoolwork. It seemed to me that learning Chinese was not a privilege, but a chore. For these reasons I never learned the basics correctly, I did just enough work to get by (and not get into trouble with my parents), and studied just enough to advance in the grade levels. In turn, my minimal work and disdain for Chinese school led to my slow downfall in the upper grade levels. I muddled through my last years in confusion, despair, and frustration, but tried to laugh it all off. Because for the first time I was beginning to see what it was all for, what it meant to my parents, and what it finally also meant to me. Because there is a country with a billion citizens and I would be able to hold a conversation with just about any one of them. Because there is literature thousands of years old that I would be able to read, understand, and cherish. Because there are relatives I could meet and still have ties with. Because there is a wealth of knowledge and opportunity waiting for me half a world away. Because I could speak to Chinese people living in the U.S. in their native tongue, making them more comfortable and open. But I realized all this too late, and regrettably, was too ashamed to start all over again, learning the basics like I should have. Staying in the upper class and trying hopelessly to keep up with the others just frustrated me further. Due to this, and my increasing high school work load, I finally quit, but did so with the good and honest intention of learning the basics at home. However, lack of motivation and interest in other things pushed this promise of self-learning to, unfortunately, the present. But the satisfaction I take in understanding another language in television or conversation has made me think more than once about going back to Chinese school. Since it is too late for that now, I have decided to, if my schedule permits, take a Chinese language course in college, in which I will hopefully learn the things I should have twelve years ago.

As American businesses grow into a global economy, having a strong hold on an Asian background and language gives a person a foot up from the others. I feel that I am fortunate to be a Chinese American who has had constant exposure to my culture. Beginning at an early age, I have attended Chinese school, learning and enriching my childhood in the process.

As a small child, I remember looking forward to Chinese School because of the extra programs that accompanied it. I especially enjoyed dancing with thick red ribbons and dressing up in traditional Chinese dresses. When my dance class finally gave a recital, I remember the incredible feeling I got from performing. It encouraged me to pursue other performing arts such as piano, gymnastics, dance and flute.

I never really liked the academic portion of Chinese School, but I realized the importance of this part of my heritage when I moved from New Jersey to Thousand Oaks. As the time, there were no extra-curricular activities associated with my new Chinese School and so I found it hard to capture my short attention span. However, as my test scores improved from the grades of my old school, I found learning the language exciting as well as challenging. One year I even took first place in my class! To this day, I still remember receiving a call from the teacher. She told me to study extra hard for the next test so that I could ensure my position at the head of the class. That moment signifies one of the proudest accomplishments of my life.

Perhaps the most important part of my Chinese School experience was the friends I made.

Though it is impossible to maintain all connections, I still smile and greet my former Chinese

School classmates whenever I see them.
